PhD Qualifying Examination Report

Step 4 of 10

* This document should be printed, and brought to exam for committee to sign*

Reminder to Committee Members: The decision to pass or fail the oral exam is based on the student’s performance in all four areas of the exam. Examiners base their judgment of the student’s performance on the entire exam, not only on their own section. All three examiners must vote unanimously for the student to pass the exam. Failure on any section constitutes failure of the exam. A student who fails the qualifying exam must retake the entire qualifying exam covering all four areas. If a student fails a qualifying exam, the Examining Committee may recommend additional course work. When additional course work is recommended by the Examining Committee, the second qualifying exam must be completed within four months following completion of the recommended course(s). If no additional course work is recommended, the second exam must be completed within four months of the failure date. The student should submit in writing a petition to the Academic Dean to reschedule the exam. The Examining Committee will be the same for both exams. If a student fails two qualifying exams, then the student is dismissed from the Friedman School.
