REQUIRED SEMINAR ATTENDANCE POLICY

As a part of the Friedman community, and to enhance your learning experiences as a student, you are expected to attend and participate in one of the school's two weekly seminar series.

These seminars feature the latest cutting edge developments in research, policy and business, allowing you to hear directly from thought leaders in your own area of concentration and in other fields. These seminars are not courses that appear on your transcript, but any student receiving scholarship aid from the Friedman School must have regular attendance, defined as attendance of at least 70%, at one university-based seminar series (approximately 6 seminars per semester).

Students in the following programs, this must be the HNRCA seminar (currently held on Mondays at noon) unless alternative arrangements are made with your Program Director.

- Biochemical and Molecular Nutrition
- Nutritional Epidemiology
- Master of Science/Dietetic Internship

Students in the following programs, this must be the Friedman seminar (currently held on Wednesdays at noon) unless alternative arrangements are made with your academic/thesis advisor.

- Agriculture, Food and Environment
- Food Policy and Applied Nutrition
- Nutrition Interventions, Communication, and Behavior Change

Your funding may be suspended or terminated if you do not meet this requirement.
